The annual report on the world's most valuable brands February 2016

Foreword.

David Haigh, CEO, Brand Finance

In recent years there has been a growing controversy over the validity of brand valuations in general and brand valuation league tables in particular, so with my foreword this year I want to address the issue head-on.

The primary point of contention rests on the significant variation in the published values of brands by the major brand valuation agencies. However, we view these variations as a sign of healthy debate rather than as a source of weakness.

Just as equity analysts differ significantly in their target share prices for companies, so too can those in our industry differ in valuations of brands. The main reasons for differences of opinion are: brand asset definition, date of the valuation, approach adopted, financial forecasts, income attributed to the brand, weighted average cost of capital applied, growth, tax and inflation rates and the expected useful life of the brand.

Taking Apple as an example, it is quite possible for one serious valuer to take the view that Apple's dominance in smart phones is coming to an end, that volumes and margins will start dropping, that there is higher risk and therefore lower expected income, over a shorter life, with a higher cost of capital. This would tend to result in a lower brand valuation.

By contrast another valuer might believe the opposite. Some take the view that Apple will go from strength to strength in watches, televisions, finance and the auto industry and believe that it will shape all our lives for generations. This would obviously tend to result in a higher brand valuation.

There is now a widely accepted global brand valuation standard (ISO 10668) and the International Valuation Standards Council has produced a broader standard on the valuation of Intangible Assets including brands. Brand valuations are regularly relied upon by accountants, auditors, tax specialists, lawyers, licensing managers, lenders and investors who are always financially literate and enquiring.

Based on the results of this year's Brand Finance Global 500, 18% of all quoted company enterprise value, is made up of brands. What this points to is a renewed need to educate and explain how brand valuations are conducted and how critical an understanding of brand value is to marketers, finance teams and CEOs alike. At Brand Finance, we pride ourselves on our independence of thought, clarity and transparency and welcome the chance to explain how we produce our valuations to you, so please get in touch!

Methodology

What do we mean by 'brand'?

Definition of 'Brand'

Brand Finance helped to craft the internationally recognised standard on Brand Valuation, ISO 10668. That defines a brand as "a marketing-related intangible asset including, but not limited to, names, terms, signs, symbols, logos and designs, or a combination of these, intended to identify goods, services or entities, or a combination of these, creating distinctive images and associations in the minds of stakeholders, thereby generating economic benefits/value."

However, a brand makes a contribution to a company beyond that which can be sold to a third party. 'Brand Contribution' refers to the total economic benefit that a business derives from its brand, from volume and price premiums over generic products to cost savings over less well-branded competitors.

Brand Strength

Brand Strength is the part of our analysis most directly and easily influenced by those responsible for marketing and brand management. In order to determine the strength of a brand we have developed the Brand Strength Index (BSI). We analyse marketing investment, brand equity (the goodwill accumulated with customers, staff and other stakeholders) and finally the impact of those on business performance. Following this analysis, each brand is assigned a BSI score out of 100, which is fed into the brand value calculation. Based on the score, each brand in the league table is assigned a rating between AAA+ and D in a format similar to a credit rating. AAA+ brands are exceptionally strong and well managed while a failing brand would be assigned a D grade.

Brand Finance calculates the values of the brands in its league tables using the 'Royalty Relief approach'. This approach involves estimating the likely future sales that are attributable to a brand and calculating a royalty rate that would be charged for the use of the brand, i.e. what the owner would have to pay for the use of the brand—assuming it were not already owned.

The steps in this process are as follows:

- 1 Calculate brand strength on a scale of 0 to 100 based on a number of attributes such as emotional connection, financial performance and sustainability, among others. This score is known as the Brand Strength Index.
- 2 Determine the royalty rate range for the respective brand sectors. This is done by reviewing comparable licensing agreements sourced from Brand Finance's extensive database of license agreements and other online databases.

present value (NPV)

which equals the

brand value.

- 3 Calculate royalty rate. The brand strength score is applied to the royalty rate range to arrive at a royalty rate. For example, if the royalty rate range in a brand's sector is 0-5% and a brand has a brand strength score of 80 out of 100, then an appropriate royalty rate for the use of this brand in the given sector will be 4%.
- 4 Determine brand specific revenues estimating a proportion of parent company revenues attributable to a specific brand.
- 5 Determine forecast brand specific revenues using a function of historic revenues, equity analyst forecasts and economic growth rates.
- 6 Apply the royalty rate to the forecast revenues to derive brand revenues.
- 7 Brand revenues are discounted post tax to a net present value which equals the brand value.

Executive Summary - Brand Value

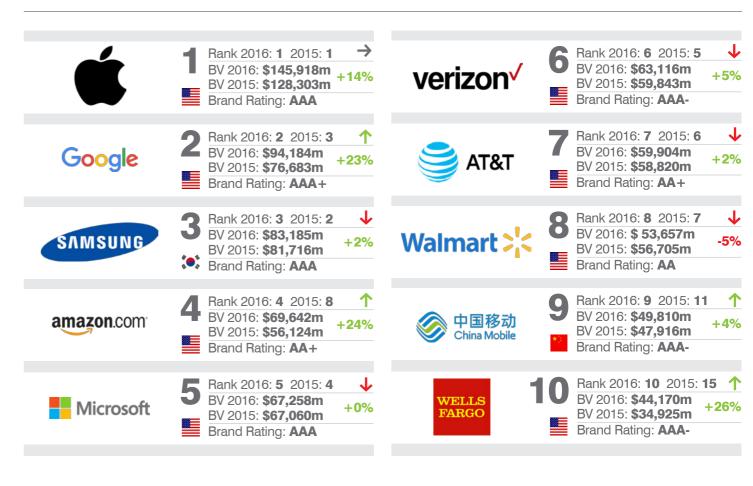

Global 500

Apple maintains its dominance at the summit of the Brand Finance Global 500. Despite annual predictions of a plateau or fall from grace, it has proved a continuous source of success with 2015/16 proving no exception. Brand value is up 14%, thanks to the huge success of the iPhone 6 and recently released iPhone 6s. Revenue for Q4 of the fiscal year 2015 was a record-breaking US$51.5 billion with profits at US$11.1 billion while revenues for the year were US$233.7 billion. This huge surge is partly responsible for recent disappointing sales growth (the slowest since the iPhone was launched in 2007). However, with 74.8 million handsets sold in the last quarter in a saturated market, assertions that Apple has gone rotten are premature. Apple Pay is beginning to generate traction, potentially heralding the brand's long-anticipated expansion into the broader arena of financial services, to say nothing of its rumoured foray into the auto industry.

The most notable changes in the top ten are the jumps in rank of Google and Amazon. Google had been held down in 3rd place by Samsung since 2012. New parent company Alphabet announced revenue growth of 13% this year, due to increasing mobile search revenue. There has also been a 3 point improvement in brand strength which together have seen brand value rise 27% to US$94.2 billion. Clearly the organisation's new brand architecture is showing positive early signs. Amazon continues its ascent of the rankings, jumping ahead of Microsoft, Verizon and AT&T to place 4th. Amazon has been confounding analysts of late, beating expectations in three of the last four quarters. Revenue growth from its 'Prime' next-day delivery services have been a significant driving force. It has supported Prime by developing original content under the same brand and following a trail blazed by Netflix (another strong performer this year, having risen 51%) Amazon is winning plaudits for the quality and popularity of programs such as Mozart in the Jungle and The Man in the High Castle. Amazon's Fire smartphone was far less successful than Amazon would have hoped, however the tablet version has been much better received.

Facebook is another tech brand continuing to make major strides. It has been one of the fastest rising brands over the last three years, increasing in brand value from US$5.57 billion in 2013 to US$9.82 billion in 2014, US$24.18 billion in 2015 and US$34 billion today an increase over the period of over 500%. Facebook is now the world's 18th most valuable brand, up from 30th in 2015, a position that better reflects the cultural influence it has come to exert over the past decade. The firm has been able to monetize its offering much more effectively of late, finally harnessing the potential of mobile advertising. Revenue in Q3 2015 was up 41% on the previous year, driven almost entirely by mobile advertising growth.

Tech brands as a whole have performed well and those from China in particular. Many of these Chinese tech titans were virtually unknown just a few years ago and some are barely known outside their home market today but are making waves financially and building brands that are rapidly gaining traction outside China. WeChat is a good example. Its user base grew over 40% between late 2014 and late 2015 and is now over 650 million, with 70 million outside China. It is often compared to the more familiar (at least in the West) Whatsapp, however, WeChat is much more than a messaging app and offers videogaming and payment services. These additional services are helping to drive WeChat's brand value, which is up 83% to US$6.5 billion.

NetEase has been even more successful, with approximately 800 million registered users of its games, which include Fantasy Westward Journey, Heroes of Tang Dynasty and World of Warcraft (licensed). It recently established a North American office, focussed on westernorientated mobile games rather than the massively multiplayer online role playing games for which NetEase is better known, which is responsible for the hugely popular Speedy Ninja. Brand value has more than doubled (from US$1.7 billion to US$3.6 billion) in response to the same trend in revenue growth, enabling NetEase to make its debut in the Brand Finance Global 500 this year.

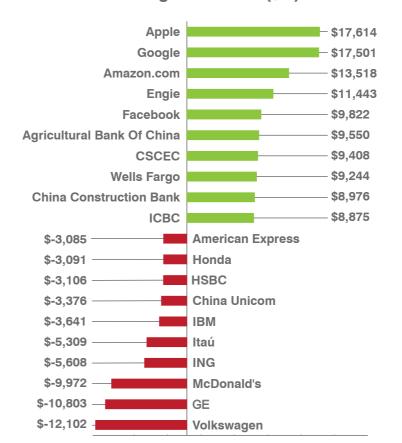

Hikvision, another Chinese tech giant, is also a new entrant. Its focus is more on hardware than software, producing video-surveillance equipment. Its brand value is US$3.3 billion, up 65% on 2015.

Chinese firms are among the top performing from any sector; four of the top ten are Chinese including all four of the top performing brands. Evergrande Real is the fastest growing brand this year, having added 112% to its brand value between 2015 and 2016. While the continued rapid growth of Chinese firms is to be welcomed and lauded, the presence of a real estate brand at the top of the list could be grist to the mill of those claiming that China's property market is overheated and its economy as a whole set for a shock.

At the lower end of the table, this year's two worst performing brands are both Brazilian banks, Itau is down 59% and Banco de Brasil

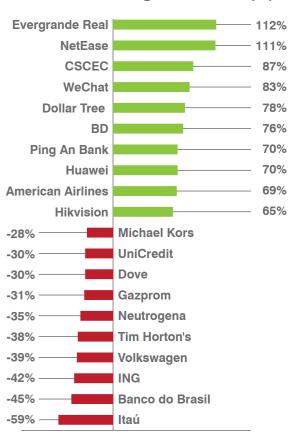

Executive Summary - Brand Value

45%. They have been hit hard by the country's ailing economy and weakened exchange rate. Brazil's economic position is bleak, with recent forecasts suggesting a 2.95% contraction over the course of 2016. Dilma Rousseff scraped back into office in late 2014 and her failure to either control public spending, improve the economy or placate the domestic audience (riots erupted in 2015) is seriously undermining international confidence in Brazil and its brands. Ms Rousseff and several high-profile figures in politics and industry have been tainted by the Petrobras bribery scandal, compounding the problem. Between 2014 and 2015 Brazil lost 17% of its nation brand value according to the latest Brand Finance Nation Brands report and Standard & Poors downgraded the country's credit rating to BBB-. Low commodity prices have been a contributory factor to Brazil's economic woes for several years but the plunging oil price is only making matters worse. With oil prices below US$40 a barrel, 80% of Petrobras operations are loss-making. Petrobras, hit by both this and the continuing fallout from the corruption scandal, has seen brand value fall 14%.

Volkswagen is also amongst this year's worst performing brands. This may come as little surprise given the scale of the scandal that has engulfed the brand, following revelations that it programmed its diesel vehicles to activate their optimal emission-reduction settings only when being tested and that, driven under normal conditions, they would emit up to 40 times the more nitrogen oxide. In December Brand Finance estimated that VW may see brand value fall by as much as $10 billion. In fact the affair has turned out to be even more damaging than that. Brand value is down by US$12 billion to US$18.9 billion leading to a fall in rank from 18th to 57th.

Coca-Cola is another iconic brand that is beginning to falter. Its problems are by no means as severe as VW's; brand value is down 5% (by US$1.6 billion) to US$34.2 billion. This has seen its rank fall from 11th last year to 17th today. This position is more remarkable given Coca-Cola's past performance. Coca-Cola was the world's most valuable brand across all industries in 2007. with a brand value of $43.1bn. Increasing concerns over the links between carbonated drinks and obesity have begun to undermine what the Coca-Cola brand has represented for over one hundred years. The low calorie, naturally-sweetened 'Coke Life', is Coke's response to the challenge. Rather than relying only on the acquisition or development of new brands, a strategy that Pepsico has employed, there was clearly a belief at the Coca-Cola Company that the master brand could stretch beyond its traditional values of fun, friendship and refreshment to health and sustainability.

Unfortunately however Coke Life sales have been disappointing to say the least. UK sales peaked in October 2014 at £4.1 million but fell every month thereafter, having dropped 71% by November 2015. The problem lies with its positioning. It is marketed as a more natural, low sugar version of Coke however, though lower in sugar than Coke, with 89 calories per can it is still very sweet and as Mark Ritson, a long-time critic of Coke Life, has observed, "consumers who opt for a more natural beverage are, by definition, going to switch categories to find it" (Marketing Week, August 2015).

Above: Coca-Cola's new "One-Brand" strategy has seen it bring all Coke brands under one master brand.

Coca-Cola remain committed to the core brand however. So much so that they have decided to roll out their 'one-brand' strategy internationally. The intention is to communicate the idea that Coke Light (Diet Coke), Coke Zero and Coke Life are simply different ways of enjoying Coke as well as a way to achieve marketing efficiencies by reducing the need for sub-brand-specific campaigns. Whether the approach, directed by CMO Marcos de Quinto, will reverse or at least slow Coca-Cola's brand value decline will be carefully scrutinized.

At the core of Brand Finance's brand valuation calculation is brand strength. To calculate this we have developed the Brand Strength Index (BSI). Each brand is awarded a score out of 100 based on factors such as familiarity, loyalty, promotion, marketing investment, staff satisfaction and corporate reputation. Based on this score, brands are allocated a letter grade, similar to a credit rating, from D to AAA+.

Disney is this year's strongest (most powerful) brand. Though it has long been present amongst the elite group of powerful 'AAA+' brands, this year is the first time it has claimed the top spot. Lego was first last year thanks in part to the success of the Lego Movie. Disney's success this year is testament to the enduring power of the silver screen as both a source of and support for the world's most powerful brands.

Disney's brand strength is founded on its rich history and original IP, the classic characters of Mickey Mouse and friends (Minnie, Donald, Goofy), Disney princesses, etc. However its now dominant position is the result of its many acquisitions and the powerful brands it has brought under its roof.

The purchase of ABC, including sports network ESPN, took place in 1995. ESPN has been somewhat troubled of late, as cable TV is increasingly threatened by online media, but it remains an integral part of the Walt Disney Company. The program of acquisitions was stepped up from 2005 under the tenure of Robert Iger. Disney acquired Pixar and its huge array of film franchises, characters and other IP for US$7.4 billion. The next major target was Marvel, acquired in 2009 for US$4.24 billion. The pervasiveness of the action hero genre underlines both the strategic importance of this purchase as well as the degree to which Disney is leveraging its asset. Perhaps the most important of all however was the acquisition of Lucasfilm, and the Star Wars franchise in 2012.

Executive Summary - Brand Strength

Star Wars Episode VII 'The Force Awakens', the first film under Disney's aegis, launched in December following unparalleled publicity and anticipation. It has more than matched the hype and has been the crucial factor in helping Disney become the world's most powerful brand this year.

It has broken countless box office records, becoming the fastest to gross US$1 billion, enjoying the most successful opening weekend ($529 million) and based on its total box office gross of nearly US$2 billion it is not just Disney's most successful film but the most successful film in the US and Canada ever. Merchandise has formed a hugely important component; in 2015 Star Wars toys generated over $700 million, more than the combined totals for three other hugely popular franchises (the Avengers, Jurassic World and 'Minions').

Based on these impressive figures and Disney's commercial stewardship, Brand Finance has estimated the value of the Star Wars brand to be US$10 billion, dwarfing the sum Disney paid little over three years ago. Though Disney appears to have engineered a very favourable deal, the value of the Star Wars brand lies as much in Disney's unparalleled expertise in the entertainment sector as with the inherent strength of Star Wars as a brand. Disney is managing to exploit the Star Wars concept both rapidly and sensitively, a difficult feat to pull off. The scale of Star Wars' success was by no means assured but by securing JJ Abrams as director, Disney has demonstrated an appreciation of how to both appease existing fans and appeal to a new generation. Annual film releases are planned for the foreseeable future, with spin offs such as 'Rogue One' (to be released this year) complementing the central trilogy and providing greater volume and consistency of revenues and it is difficult to imagine another businesses with the capacity to develop the merchandising opportunities more effectively.

Disney's resorts are marketed as 'the happiest place on Earth'. That has proved true not just for its customers but for investors too.

Lego has lost its position at the top of the table. It remains a very powerful brand for many of the same reasons identified last year. Lego's appeal spans generations; as well as the creative freedom it gives children, the brand appeals to the nostalgia of adults. It generally avoids gendered marketing, by appealing to boys and girls equally Lego maximises the size of its target demographic. That approach also pleases parents, as concerns mount over the effect toys may have on the outlook.

The Danish company has been beset by a series of controversies of late though which threaten to affect its wholesome image and may have contributed to the loss of its position at the top of Brand Finance's brand strength table. 2014 saw a brush with controversy when Greenpeace protesters challenged Lego over its partnership with Shell. Greenpeace created its own Lego video, with a mournful version of the Lego Movie theme song played over scenes of Shell's alleged destruction of the arctic. More recently it has been fined by German regulators for attempting to prevent retailers from discounting its products, souring relationships with many stakeholders at once; government, commercial partners and customers alike. It has also been forced into a U turn on its policy to quiz customers who wish to buy in bulk about the intended use of the product and to prevent those planning to use it for 'political' purposes. Chinese artist Ai Weiwei fell foul of the policy, leading to accusations that Lego was in some way colluding with the Chinese state in censorship.

L'Oréal is 5th on the list, with sub-brand L'Oréal Paris 6th. L'Oréal has pulled off the trick of simultaneously capturing the mass market while maintaining an air of exclusivity. It is a powerhouse of brand creation. The key to its success is its unrivalled marketing focus and investment, All L'Oréal brands, and L'Oréal Paris in particular, have benefitted from the Bettencourt family's constructive approach to reinvestment. They have always prioritized long term value over short term profits and are just as likely to channel profits into marketing as they are to pay a dividend. Sales in the first half of 2015 grew 5.3% and while Brazil has proved a challenging market this year (as it has for many brands), growth in China is more than compensating.

Brand Value and Share Price

It has long been acknowledged that powerful brands drive stakeholder preference, improving business performance and ultimately increasing shareholder value. However, for the first time the extent of this effect has been quantified.

In December of 2015 we took a retrospective look at the share price of the brands we have valued and their subsequent stock market performance, revealing compelling evidence to suggest that highly branded businesses and those with strong brands can outperform the market.

The most striking finding is that an investment strategy based on the most highly branded companies (those where brand value makes up a high proportion of overall enterprise value) would have led to a return almost double that of the average for the S&P 500 as a whole.

Between 2007 and 2015, the average return across the S&P was 49%. However, by using Brand Finance's data, investors could have generated returns of up to 97%. Investing in companies with a brand value to enterprise value (BV/EV) ratio of greater than 30% would have generated returns of 94%. Investing exclusively in the 10 companies with the highest BV/EV ratios would have resulted in a 96% return.

115 of the top 500 brands in the 2016 list fall into this category. The group includes luxury goods businesses that one might expect to be highly branded such as Burberry, Gucci and Ralph Lauren, well-known consumer brands such as Audi, Land Rover, Dove, Ikea and Nestle, but also financial and B2B brands such as Shinhan, Fujitsu and Allstate.

There was a similar effect for brands rated as AAA or AAA+ according to Brand Finance's Brand Strength Index. A strategy based on investment in all AAA and AAA+ rated brands would have led to a return of 54% over the eight years from 2007. However, if only top-rated US brands were targeted, the return would have been 87%.

There are just 42 brands in this year's top 500 with a brand rating of AAA or better and just a handful that have this rating as well as a BV/EV of greater than 30%. This elite group includes L'Oréal, Nike, Marriot, Hilton, Ferrari and Porsche. It will be interesting to see whether these brands deliver similarly impressive investor returns over the coming years.
