It’s All About Respect

It's a seventh annual survey, money managers indicated the degree to which they respect—or don’t respect—the world’s 10 largest public companies (presented by total market value as of Dec. 25). This year’s ranking saw some formerly ranking stars, such as Johnson & Johnson and Toyota, fall sharply, and others, such as Google, sink to new lows. Some companies soared. Amazon.com, surges to No. 1.

Johnson & Johnson, at No. 10, stands out in many ways. It is one of the most recognized brands in the world. Its products are ubiquitous, from pain relievers to baby shampoo. Its reputation for quality and integrity is unmatched. In recent years, however, Johnson & Johnson has faced a number of challenges that have tarnished its image. These challenges include the recall of hip implants at DePuy, another subsidiary, and the recall of over-the-counter products such as Tylenol, Benadryl, and Sinutab.

Despite these challenges, Johnson & Johnson has managed to maintain its position as one of the most respected companies in the world. This is due in large part to the company’s commitment to quality and integrity. Johnson & Johnson has always been known for its commitment to producing high-quality products that are safe and effective. This commitment has been evident in its decision to recall products that may have been defective, even if it meant losing sales.

Johnson & Johnson has also been proactive in addressing the issues that have arisen. The company has established a number of programs and initiatives to improve its products and processes. These include the implementation of new quality control measures, the creation of a new compliance division, and the appointment of a new chief compliance officer.

In the end, Johnson & Johnson’s commitment to quality and integrity has paid off. The company’s reputation has been restored, and it continues to be one of the most respected companies in the world. This is a testament to the company’s ability to weather storms and emerge stronger on the other side.
Devon Energy’s focus on oil and gas assets in the U.S. and Canada could lead to more reserves, bigger profits and higher shares.

A Champ Among Domestic Drillers by Dimitri DeFotis

Devon Energy’s focus on oil and gas assets in the U.S. and Canada could lead to more reserves, bigger profits and higher shares.

Devon Energy, one of the largest independent U.S. oil producers, has been a rising star in the industry. The company’s focus on growing its oil reserves and higher-margin oil-based production in the Barnett Shale in Texas has been a key driver of its success. Devon’s management team, led by CEO Andrewore, has made strategic decisions that have helped the company achieve its goals.

While the company has faced challenges, such as the decline in oil prices and increased competition, Devon Energy has remained focused on its core business. The company has continued to invest in its assets and has maintained a strong balance sheet, which has helped it weather the challenges.

In 2011, Devon Energy’s focus on oil and gas assets in the U.S. and Canada could lead to more reserves, bigger profits and higher shares. The company has been a leader in the industry and has achieved impressive results.

How to Get Reprints
If you are interested in reprints of this article, please contact our Customer Service Department at 877-895-0508 or via e-mail at customerservice@barrons.com. Reprints are available at a nominal charge. A 10% discount is available for all Barron’s subscribers. Please be sure to order at least 2 weeks prior to your required date of distribution.

Cover Story
Investors in Devon Energy can expect to see a rise in the company’s share price and a higher dividend payment in the near future. The company has a strong management team and a solid balance sheet, which should help it weather any challenges.

The Bottom Line
Devon Energy can continue to be a top performer in the oil and gas industry, providing investors with a solid return on their investment.