

UK RepTrak[™] Pulse 2013 - key findings

Marks & Spencer has the best corporate reputation.

- Marks & Spencer has the best corporate reputation, with an excellent RepTrakTM reputation score of 86.20. This is an increase of just over 4 points compared to last year. Levels of support for Marks & Spencer have also increased: while previously 49.6% would definitely recommend Marks & Spencer to others, now 62% would do so. This underlines the link between reputation and support.
- Dyson and Rolls-Royce also have top reputations, with excellent RepTrakTM scores of 83.86 and 82.20 respectively.
- Overall, reputations for corporate UK have remained stable over the year.

Governance increases in importance;

- Governance is the second most important driver, accounting for 15.9% of reputation
- The third most important is Citizenship at 14.1%.

Reputation and support move together: improve reputation by 5 points, positive support improves by 5%.

- Overall, public support for corporate UK has not shown a major shift compared to 2012.
- However, the high proportions of neutral support indicate that there is still a lot of trust and support to be won by corporate UK.

Key findings from 2012-2013

The findings from this years RepTrak™ study show that the UK public looks at wider issues, beyond perceptions of products and services, when considering the reputations of companies. Recent events, and the subsequent effects on the reputations of the companies involved, highlight the fact that companies need to deliver on public expectations in order to receive high levels of trust and support.

London 2012 Olympics

Companies that have been involved in the London 2012 Olympics have seen varying effects on their reputation over the past year. British Airways, BT, and Thomas Cook have seen significant improvements in their reputation. However, G4S, Rio Tinto, BP, Lloyds Banking Group, and GlaxoSmithKline have faced a reputation decline. These companies have faced negative events either at a company or a sector level. These findings suggest that while companies can engage in positively regarded events, it's not shield against negative events. Companies need to build reputations on on the things that really matter to stakeholders in order to win trust and support with the UK public.

The horsemeat scandal has led to lower levels of trust for UK food retailers and manufacturers

The horsemeat scandal in early 2013 has affected reputations of the food retailers and manufacturers perceived to be directly involved, diminishing reputation and support for these companies. All food retailers have seen their reputations drop, with Tesco experiencing the largest decline (-11.65). Reputations of food manufacturers have particularly suffered: both Igloo Group and Findus Group have seen a massive drop in their reputations. Specifically, Findus Group's reputation has fallen over 27 points – the largest fall of a company in the 2013 study.

The larger UK banks have yet to regain trust with the UK public; Building Societies are winning.

• UK banks are still not regarded highly among the UK public. While building societies have seen improvements in their reputations, the Big Four see either their reputations relatively unchanged, or a significant decline in reputation. The reputations of HSBC and RBS have remained relatively the same compared to last year. On the other hand, Lloyds Banking Group (-5.94) and Barclays (-10.77) have seen their reputations decline significantly.

Conclusions

- Consumers are now far more in tune with corporate behaviour, and this is having a direct impact on preference:
 - i. Perceptions of Governance has increased as a driver of reputation.
 - ii. The wider 'corporate' dimensions are where the greatest gains are to be made in improving positive support perceptions of good Governance, positive Citizenship and excellent Workplace.
 - iii. Companies that perform well across dimensions have the highest levels of support.
- 2. Sponsorship and brand led initiatives are not enough to endear positive support companies must be seen and be believed to be doing the right things.
 - i. The London Olympics did not provided a shield to protect the reputations of the sponsors that suffered reputation issues during the Olympic period.
 - ii. Reputation is about understanding the expectations of your stakeholders then insuring your brand, comms and internal capabilities and behaviours are aligned with expectations..

Case study: Marks & Spencer

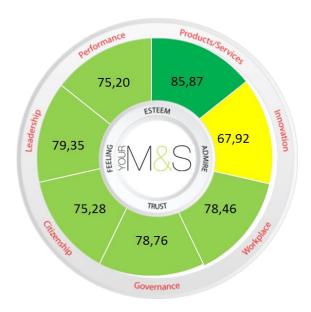

Marks & Spencer- 2013

The Reputation Leader can still improve:

Marks & Spencer represents an interesting case study as the top scorer of this year's results of corporate reputations amongst the informed general public. The company's shares have added 6% over the last year. A recent presentation of the company's Q4 2012 results highlighted a 4% increase in food sales, while general merchandise including clothing fell 3,8%. In the Q4 statement, Marks & Spencer's CEO Marc Bolland stated that the company was happy to be left unaffected by the recent issues affecting the food industry. However, recently, the press and comments from analysts have centred on worries about the future innovation and style of the company's clothing division, especially its women's clothing.

Relating Marks & Spencer's financial performance and strategic initiatives to this year's RepTrak™ study, the study provides some concrete insight in that it underlines major differences between the general public's perceptions of the company's innovation against other reputational dimensions. Benchmarked against its other dimensions, innovation scores up to 26% lower than other dimensions.

Drivers of Reputation in the UK

'Corporate' dimensions of reputation are as important as ever.

- Perceptions of Products & Services remain the key reputational driver, accounting for 17.6% of corporate reputation.
- Consistent with last year, Governance (15.9%) is the second most important reputational driver, followed by Citizenship (14.1%).
- Each dimension accounts for at least 12% of reputation, indicating that companies need to consider all seven dimensions in order to have a strong reputation.
- While Products & Services remain important, UK consumers are increasingly looking at enterprise related dimensions such as Governance and Citizenship in order to form their perceptions about UK corporations.

What's driving behaviour?

The informed general public is mostly driven by corporate related dimensions

- Consumers continue to be more led by the corporate dimensions (Workplace, Governance, Citizenship, Leadership, and Performance) than by the product dimensions (Products & Services and Innovation) in their support towards UK companies.
- This highlights how the public continuously places importance on how corporations behave from a wider perspective, and look beyond corporations' products and services.

Changes in the Reputation Drivers in the UK, Over Time:

Products & Services and Governance remain top reputational drivers

- The majority of the dimensions have remained relatively stable over the past year when it comes to their individual weight on reputation. Shifts across the majority of the dimensions are minimal.
- Innovation has decreased the most, decreasing in weight by 1 point. The weight of Products & Services has also decreased over the past year. This highlights that product-related dimensions, although still important, are becoming just as important as the overall wider corporate dimensions.
- Year-on-year we observe the converging importance of the seven dimensions suggesting that corporations should be ensuring they are doing the right thing and communicating across all dimensions.

Product/Services: 'Company' offers high quality products and services -- it offers excellent products and reliable services Innovation: 'Company' is an innovative company -- it makes or sells innovative products or innovates in the way it does business Workplace: 'Company' is an appealing place to work -- it treats its employees well

Governance: 'Company' is a responsibly-run company -- it behaves ethically and is open & transparent in its business dealings

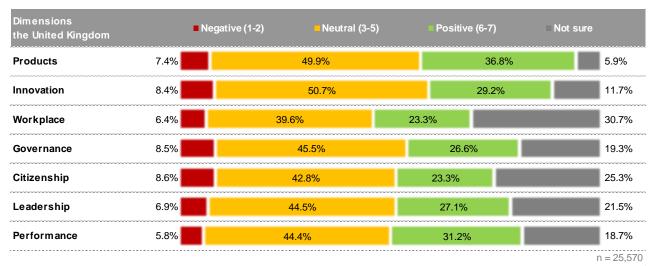

Citizenship: 'Company' is a good corporate citizen -- it supports good causes & protects the environment Leadership: 'Company' is a company with strong leadership -- it has visible leaders & is managed effectively Performance: 'Company' is a high-performance company -- it delivers good financial results

Dimension Distributions, 2013

There are high levels of neutral opinions on how companies perform on the different dimensions

- Apart from how much each dimension contributes to reputation, it is also important to consider how the public generally perceives the different dimensions on an overall level.
- The proportion of positive perceptions is highest for Products & Services (36.8%).
- The highest proportions of neutral and uncertain perceptions are for Workplace (70.3%) and Citizenship (68.1%).
- This indicates both an opportunity and risk: High proportions of 'Neutral' and 'Not sure' ratings indicate the possibility of converting these into positive perceptions, but at the same time these dimensions might affect a company's reputation negatively if efforts in these dimensions are not of an adequate level. This is especially important to consider for Citizenship: the majority of the public does not have a clear opinion on how companies perform in this area, however it is one of the key reputational drivers in the UK.

Product/Services: 'Company' offers high quality products and services -- it offers excellent products and reliable services Innovation: 'Company' is an innovative company -- it makes or sells innovative products or innovates in the way it does business Workplace: 'Company' is an appealing place to work -- it treats its employees well Governance: 'Company' is a responsibly-run company -- it behaves ethically and is open & transparent in its business dealings

UK Respondent Profile & Methodology

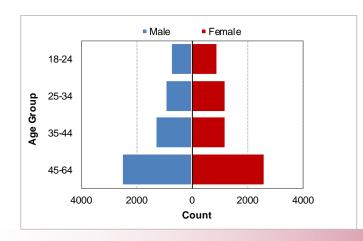

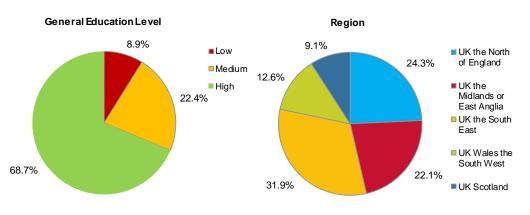

U.K. Respondent Profile

- A total of 35,908 ratings of the 300 selected companies were obtained from a sample of 10,532
- · All companies were rated by at least 100 respondents.
- · Ratings are statistically significant at a 95% confidence level
- Respondents distribution was balanced to the UK adult population on age and gender.

To be included in Reputation Institute's 'UK's 180 Most Reputable Companies' list, all companies had to meet the following criteria:

- · They were public companies listed in the FTSE100 and FTSE250 with the largest market cap and revenues
- · They had high visibility among the general public: at least 10% of respondents were at least somewhat familiar with the companies
- They were unlisted but were of comparable size and visibility
- They had annual revenues of at least £0,5 billion.

All Scores are Standardized

Global Reputation Pulse Scores - Standardized and Comparable

Market research shows that people are inclined to rate companies more or less favorably in different countries, or when they are asked questions directly or online. When asked in a personal interview, for example, it's known that people tend to give a company higher ratings than when they are asked by phone, or when they are asked to answer questions about the company online. This is a well-established source of 'systematic bias'. Another source of systematic bias comes from national culture --in some countries, people are universally more positive in their responses than in other countries. In statistical terms, it means that the entire distribution of scores in a 'positive' country is artificially 'shifted' because of this propensity for people in that country to give higher ratings to all companies, good or bad. The distribution of scores in that country may also be more 'spread out' than in another because people have more information and are able to make more subtle differences between companies.

To overcome these sources of systematic bias, Reputation Institute's policy is to adjust reputation scores by standardizing them against the aggregate distribution of all scores obtained from the RI's annual Global Reputation Pulse study. Standardization has the effect of lowering scores in countries where consumers tend to over-rate companies, and has the effect of raising scores for companies in countries in which consumers tend to rate companies more negatively.

Two adjustments are made for every Global Reputation Pulse Score

Reputation Institute uses its cumulative database of reputation scores measured internationally to carry out two adjustments:

- 1) Country Adjustment: All scores derived from surveys are standardized by subtracting the country mean and dividing by the standard deviation of all known scores previously obtained in that country. In statistical terms, this adjustment 'normalizes' the distribution of scores in the country to a mean of 0 and a standard deviation of 1, producing a 'z-score' for the company.
- 2) Global Adjustment: A global mean and standard deviation are calculated from all of the country-adjusted ratings. A Global Reputation Pulse score is scaled back by multiplying each company's z-score by the global standard deviation and adding back the global mean. The resulting number is the Global Reputation Pulse or Dimension score that is reported.
